Description

Sandymoor Cross Wood is on the north-western side of what was known as the Braddon Estate. Around 30 years ago much of the estate was planted with mixed native trees with the intention of managing as a coppice crop to power a woodchip boiler. Over time the woodchip boiler has become redundant so the woodland is now established with maturing trees and is a haven for wildlife as well as a good timber resource.

The open fields at the lower, western part of the land provide a pleasant open aspect and good levels of light year round to the trees. There are good internal paths and tracks as well as a stoned forestry track.

The local area in and around Sandymoor Cross Wood has been recognised as an important landscape both visually and for the abundance of wildlife.

This woodland and the surround woodlands have been identified by the Local Authority as an important habitat feature within the landscape and as such have been given a further recognised level of protection with an Article 4 designation. This allows enjoyment and management of the woodland but will require planning permission for anything that usually falls under permitted development.

The purchasers of the woodland will be asked to enter into a covenant to ensure the quiet and peaceful enjoyment of adjoining woodlands and meadows.

Trees

At the lower, western edge of the woodland where the entrance is, the trees are dominated by Alder trees (Alnus glutinosa). Alder trees can reach a height of nearly 30 metres and are good habitat for lichens which are often found on their dark fissured bark. You can identify alder trees by their small cones and by purple twigs in the winter.

Walking up through the trees the alder turns into an area of oak trees with some wild cherry and then at the heart of the woodland a planting of small-leaved lime, ideal for creating a coppice habitat.

Toward the upper, eastern side of Sandymoor Cross Wood are some planted beech and ash trees. The ash trees could be thinned out and replanted with other species to improve the biodiversity of the woodland even further.

Finally along the northern and eastern boundaries of the woodland is an old hedge bank lined with mature knarled old oak trees along with birch and willow trees.

Wildlife

Butterflies and dragonflies skip along the grassy rides and paths throughout the woodland.

Deer frequent the area and occasionally badgers and foxes.

Features

Within the woodland are a good series of tracks and paths which allow excellent access throughout for recreational enjoyment and management.

There is a small stream along the western boundary of the woodland.

Access, tracks and footpaths

From the little used country lanes around the area the woodland has a concrete track that leads to the beginning of the stoned forest track which leads to the woodland itself.

Once within the woodland there is a private stone parking & turning area and a good series of tracks and paths leading through the different areas of Sandymoor Cross Wood.

Rights and covenants

Sporting rights are included.

The standard covenant applies.

The purchasers of the woodland will be asked to enter into a covenant to ensure the quiet and peaceful enjoyment of adjoining woodlands and meadows.

Activities

Sandymoor Cross Wood is a young woodland that can be managed and maintained for wildlife enjoyment and conservation as well as long term small scale timber production.

Installing some bird boxes may entice robins, wrens, blue tits or even woodpeckers.

There are clearer areas within the woodland that could be suitable for creating a small wildlife pond.

The variety of tree species found within are perfect as a supply for woodturning, green woodwork or making your own charcoal.
